Ours is a Kreg track saw, but there are many other brands including Festool and Makita. The last two will be the object of today's article, when we answer the question if the tracks are interchangeable. Historically, the cutting tool was first introduced by Festool in 1980. He rode on an aluminum plunger saw the rail guide, and resulted in a perfectly straight cut. The saw depended on the track in which it surrounded, instead of the questionable firmness of a free hand cutting, to keep a line carefully measured when breaking large pieces as plywood leaves. Their tracks had non-stick strips at the bottom that held the track in place during the cut, although the clamps could also be used if you wanted to be absolutely sure. The saw itself has a closed blade and has corridors on its base that fit into grooves on the track. These grooves keep the saw in place while you move it along the track. The saw blade is at the edge of the track that was aligned with the measurement mark on the part. The edge of the strip is executed along the measured line, and the cut is made by the saw running along that edge. Cutting plates, cutting and floors or subfloors are well inside the track saw wheel. It is also a dive saw with the ability to define depth accurately which is kept throughout the cutting. The track saws make long and very accurate cuts much faster, easier and with great precision than a circular saw or table saw. They are lightweight and easy to move, the tracks are easy to set up, not necessarily require clamps, and can even make glove cuts and beveled. The rails come in a variety of lengths with easy to assemble track connectors to extend to any length you need your cut to be. It is possible, for example, to make cuts sinceif you have enough rail sections. This time, a difference that takes in favor of Festool's tracks on the Makita tracks. The anti-apple resources. We mentioned earlier that track mountains can make mitra and chamfer cuts. Although these are not the strengths of the track mountain range, they are factory. The vast majority of the use of track saw will be in a long time, straight cuts. In this case, Makita's track is not compatible with the Serra do Festool. The details of the anti-lock features do not make a comfortable adjustment. Since chamfer cuts require great precise, if you have a parties drop, that's the best of having festivoal tracks if you are making chamfers cuts. Festool's ranges from 8 different lengths between 32 and 197 - Makita, however, offers only 3 lengths between 39 and 118. The many different lengths offered by Festool offer more flexibility in the lengths you can cut when the lanes are configured and connected. This can be important in your store and, if so, the festyoal tracks are more to offer. Each brand offers connection with length assembly. But we assemble them in many length options is facilitated by the many different range length offers. Although this is not a fatal difference and does not affect performance, we think it is worth noting. What is the preconception difference between the tracks of Makita and Festool? The mountains of the festivoal are expensive, and we observe this in our previous peã in track mountains, and much more expensive than Makita Saws. The tracks are not different, performing almost twice the cost of the similar length makea ranges. Price plays an important role in preparing a wooden store. With about half the cost of Festool's bands, the makita tracks make sense to sonem sonem olep sonem olep eA ,odatrepa revitse otneasaRo o eS .lootsef od arres amu moc Considering. We watched the vares in Makita and Festool's tracks, but we did not find none that we would like especially to recommend you. A € instead, here is a video that compares the festool tracks and lanes with mountains and tracks. It's worth watching. We point out the differences between the tracks, and yes, we noticed a couple who ran in favor of the landslide tracks, anti-apple parties to make chamfer cuts. They are differences that may be important to you and are worth considering. We also suggest that you choose one or another track brand for your festtool mountain to avoid incurring the incore of adjusting the track adjustment saw to the track. If your orient is large enough to pay a party track, $ 800 - $ 1000 today, you can probably pay some 4 A A o e A ours festtool track. So, the large or small differences, it is not important. A final word, however, in support of Kreg. Our is among our favorite tools, and we get good use. At a price of $ 300 - $ 400 and the reasonably tracked price, we go well without a festool saw. it saw.

The Makita and Festool anti-friction strips are made of similar materials. The Makita strips have ridges that will reduce contact area and further reduce friction. Lots of woodworking machines have the table surface milled like this to reduce friction. I have both Makita and Festool tracks and the base of my saws do not have grooves cut into them. For track saws, that's sort of true because you only use the inner track. This weekend I decided to use a router on a track, and the Makita ones are the longest I have. Turns out, that does not work. Makita tracks have a lip on the outer track, preventing my Festool router-mounting thingamabob from fitting. The more you know. 02/03/2021 - 457K subscribers. *Support What We Do at The Katz-Moses Store* On this Toolsday Track Saw review, we're taking a look at the Makita VS Festool 36v Cordless Saws. In this instance, the Makita track is not compatible with the Festool saw. The detail of the anti-tipping features doesn't make for a comfortable fit. Since bevel cuts require great accuracy, if you have a Festool saw, it's best to have Festool tracks if ... 11/04/2020 - First, in summary: Festool and Makita guide rails are not exactly the same, but similar enough to be mostly compatible, so you can use a Makita track with a Festool saw, and vice versa, without major issues. But, Makita does hold a sizable portion of track saw market, its a fact regardless of the underlying reasons. And it has gained it from Festool, which used to be the sole player. And it will likely gain more, because of their flexible (free market) pricing model. THE PRICE IS 70% HIGHER FOR FESTOOL TS 55, TRACK AND 118" RAIL IS $975 FESTOOL, AND $570 MAKITA/118". i think festool makes good tools in general, but there are good alternatives that exist. the track saw seems to be 1. the wood whisperer recently replaced his Kapex with a Bosch glide. he also stating the kapex is better, but not by much, and he can do everything he ...
